Why It's endangered

The white tiger is endangered because it has a lot of problems such as spinal deformities, club feet, being cross eyed, and the same gene that makes them white also makes their brain get wired to the wrong side of their brain. It is only born to be a designer animal. Almost all zoo's are not allowed to breed the white Bengal tiger.

Interesting Facts

Did you know that the only way to breed a white tiger is by interbreeding a family of white tigers. That's right.

The white tiger's name is Panthera Tigris.

How You Can Help

You can help the white tiger by not going to zoos or telling people how beautiful they are.

They are only bred by people who want to get money, not by people who care about the animal.

They are bred because they are a designer animal and lots of people encourage this by commenting on how beautiful they are. Because of people like this the white tiger suffers daily.

You can help the white tiger by saying no to any place that does breed this animal and talking out about what's right. There are only about two hundred white Bengal tigers left in the world so please respect this animal and consider what it goes through daily just so that people can look at something different.

Diet and Behavior

The white tiger's diet in the wild is water buffalo, deer, wild boar, and goat. In captivity most white Bengal tigers are given bones twice a week and also feed on mainly chicken, kangaroo meat, and horse meat.

White Bengal tiger behavior

The white tiger's only interaction in the wild is with a mother and a cub, so then when they hunt, one white tiger would have a better chance to sneak up on its prey than lots of white tigers would. This is because a white tiger sneaks up real close and then attacks when it knows its prey will not get away. With more than one white tiger it would probably make too much noise and give the prey more time to run.
